

Weatheringtons have a Century Farm

The Weatherington farm in Hardin County has been designated as a Tennessee Century Farm.

A little more than 100 years ago, on July 21, 1909, B.R. Weatherington and Betty Jane Hill Weatherington founded a 21-acre farm northeast of Milledgeville. With their 10 children, the Weatheringtons raised cotton, corn, cattle and hay.

Today, the farm of just more than 100 acres, which includes a house built in the late 19th century and a 1940s barn, is owned by Allene Weatherington, the wife of Barney O. Weatherington, whose parents founded the farm. Daughter, Carolyn W. Roberts is the third generation to call the farm home. The land, worked by Essary Farms, produces corn and soybeans. Caneta S. Hankins, director of the Century Farms program at the Center for Historic Preservation, which is located on the MTSU campus said the Weatherington Farm is the third Century Farm to be certified in Hardin County.

The Century Farm Program recognizes the contributions of Tennessee residents who have continuously owned, and kept in production, family land for at least 100 years. Since 1984, the center at MTSU has been documenting Tennessee's agricultural heritage and history through the Tennessee Century Farm Program, and continues to administer this program.

The Tennessee Department of Agriculture began the Tennessee Century Farm Program in 1976 as part of the nation's bicentennial. Today, the it provides a metal outdoor sign, noting either 100, 150 or 200 years of "continuous agricultural production" to Century Farm families.

To be considered for eligibility, a farm must be owned by the same family for at least 100 years; must produce $1,000 revenue annually; must have at least 10 acres of the original farm; and one owner must be a resident of Tennessee. For more information about the Century Farms Program, visit its Web site at <http://histpres.mtsu.edu/histpres>. The Center for Historic Preservation also may be contacted via mail at Box 80, MTSU, Murfreesboro, Tenn., 37132, or by telephone at 615-898-2947.
